Song Bringing Big Money To British Night Watchman

LONDON, ENGLAND — "Old Bill," 75 year old Brixton night watchman with the well kept hands and the cultured voice, has written New York's latest song hit.

Billy Whitlock, once a 100 pound a week music hall star, chuckled his way through contracts that show him as a potential earner of thousands of dollars.

All because a very old gramophone record which he made in 1904 was played as a joke on an ultra-modern phonograph at a New York cocktail party.

Billy has been plodding along on his old age pension and odd night watchman jobs in South London for years.

In a few months the sprightly old man who used to make recordings for the original Edison Bell Co. will be back in the money.

The record they played at the New York cocktail party was heard by dance band maestro Guy Lombardo. It was recorded again and sold fast.

The Decca Co. cabled London to see whether the original Billy Whitlock were still alive—and swept him down to the studios to make another record of the song hit.

"It's like a dream," old Bill said. "There I was, just pottering along, getting by as well as I could on any job that offered, and here I am with my pockets stuffed with contracts!"

The records of his song, a rollicking old-fashioned polka called "Scotch Hot"—now renamed "Hop Scotch Polka"—are selling at the rate of 15,000 a week in America.

His life story is complicated. Son of a musician, he has been a sailor, skating rink instructor, gramophone recording mechanic, cinema operator, grocer and tobacconist, orchestrator and arranger, truck driver and night watchman.

Nobel Winner Will Use Money To Foster Peace

LONDON. — The Nobel prize of 192,629 Norwegian crowns ($21,889), given for efforts to promote peace, will not benefit its recipient one dime's worth financially because he's going to use it all exclusively in efforts to promote peace.

The winner of the prize, Lord Boyd Orr, is convinced that hunger is the root of just about everything and the 69-year old Scot wants to do everything possible to increase the world's food production. That's why he declines to profit from the prize—not even to the extent of a new hat.

A respected authority on nutrition, a former director-general of the United Nations food and agricultural organization, Lord Orr is a political philosopher who likes to pack wisdom into snappy epigrams. World peace is his passion.

"Not that I wouldn't fight if something vital or sacred was threatened," he says, "but I don't want to. It's so unnecessary."

Food Is Answer

His formula to end wars can be squeezed into one word — food. "Feed the people and they won't fight," he says.

He insists that "hunger is the greatest politician of them all."

Lord Boyd Orr is an earnest man with a mission who looks like an elderly, weather-beaten physician or a professor, or an up-country politician, or a farmer in town for the agricultural convention. In fact he has lived, or is living, in all these roles. Much contact with the world has not erased entirely his Ayrshire manner of speaking. There is Scotch in his r-r-r's.

He smokes matches.

There is tobacco in his pipe all right, but he lights up and forgets to puff because he is so intent on driving home a telling point. Match after match is expended as he makes his arguments factually, wittily and sometimes bitterly. The world moves much too slowly to suit him.

In young manhood he was physician. Then he became more interested, by turn, in physiology, animal nutrition, human nutrition and finally the vast problem of feeding the world to preserve peace.

Glad to be Farmer

Now he thinks of himself as a farmer and is glad to be one. He is caustic, believes that in every life there should be a garden, the outdoors and the feel of weather.

Since January, when King George elevated him to the peerage—he had been known before then as Sir John—Farmer Boyd Orr has come down from Scotland occasionally to take his place in the House of Lords, to vote, to put in some plugs for world government, to tell all who will listen about his conviction that food is the beginning and end of everything. He appreciates being in the House of Lords—it gives him a platform and a base of operations—but he doesn't think too much of it as an institution.

"Ought to have been reformed years ago," he said. But let the politicians worry about that, his mission is food.

Footman, Clockwinder Dance With Royalty at Palace Fete

LONDON.—It was a wild dream come true for the footman and the clock winder at Buckingham palace. At the annual household party the queen danced with the footman and the princess danced with the clock winder.

Queen Elizabeth, in diamond tiara and flowing green gown, waltzed with the liveried footman. Princess Margaret, sleek in rose and pink, swirled over the glassy floor with the man in charge of the palace's famous collection of French gilt clocks.

Until the wee hours of the morning they danced with other staff members in the traditional palace staff party.

King George, still recuperating from a leg ailment, sat on the sidelines until shortly after midnight. Then he retired.

Pal Tries to Aid Escape; Saws Hid in Peanut Butter

COVINGTON, KY.—Stanley Flannery wasn't satisfied with being released from the Covington jail. He returned five hours later to gain a friend's release—with a jar of peanut butter.

Flannery, 35, who has no known address, and was being held on a breach of peace warrant, was released from jail and instructed to leave the county, police said.

Instead, he returned later with a bag of goodies for James Sturgeon, Kenton county, held under $10,000 bond on charges of breaking and entering, and possessing a stolen automobile.

James Fox, turnkey, became suspicious and, inspecting the parcel of food, found a number of hacksaw blades, which had been broken in two, inside a jar of peanut butter.

Flannery walked from the jail after delivering his package.
